In Phoenix, two personal injury lawyers are keeping connected with their 20 largest clients by giving each of them an iPad.

The novel approach was taken by Marc Lamber and James Goodnow in an effort to give their clients greater access to their files. The Arizona Republic picked up the story of the pair innovative lawyers and states that one of their clients, Melissa Frankel, "uses the iPad to access a dedicated e-mail account that is used only for case documents. She has also used the lightweight device to snap photos of the accident scene. She has taken a video of her injuries and she has had Skype video conferences with the lawyers. That means that she makes fewer trips to the lawyers' downtown Phoenix office and she can reach her legal team wherever there is a Wi-Fi connection, without a laptop."

Clients must however, return the iPads to the firm when the file is completed.
